

QuickStartguide for you consideration (Portable Document suggestion)

Hiya Dan Davies,

I put together a couple of QuickStartguides for communities and was thinking of sharing something considerable for yourself, today.

Simultaneously, I was happy and delighted that you had made efforts to have to look into consultations.

This is a new era in government relations and something that was stated as a necessity at the new technology program that you are also interested in.

Being someone who is involved in the greater 'microsoft community' I would ask that you make a decision as to whether there is scope for such a consultation guide ?

I have put together some bullet points:

- the QuickStartguide should be called and referred to as just that for consultations.
- As this could go it many in-boxes the language should be in english and gaelg.
- To save to guide from extinction on social media; include the term #QuickStartguide aswell.
- Suggest what reader to use – Atril on Linux, alternativeto.net for others.
- Legal issues should be minimal as this is just a guide.
- Always say that there are no attachments included in the guide.
- The document should be able to be opened as a double-sided pdf from the beginning.
- The break out of the walled garden, you could suggest talking about the issues with a professional.
- Filtering the nay-sayers out, you could give a reference to the iompolices guide to being safe online that was updated recenntly.
- Obv. This isn't a wiki as there would be no current consultations listed – it could just be a decent guide to how to use the website.
- Say how many pages are in the QuickStartguide when ou talk about the non-attachment situation.
- People shall keep them, so please include the Week Number of issue aswell as the year (or perhaps just the actual date) .

Okay I shall update as and when required.
